Four Hugs to the Square.

The man who walks at night sees funny things and sometimes, if he happens to be a reporter, he tells the public about them. On Wedues day night, between 10 and 11 o'clock, while a fici stater of the Constitution was cleaving the dimness of Walton street, his attention was attracted by a youthful couple who were walking at the frightful speed of fifteen minutes to the half square. While the reporter was trying to think how long they could keep up this pace without stopice, they stopped in the friendly shadow of a huge bill board, and the young man clasped the young lady to his heaving bosom and kiss her. Then he looked up and down the street, as though expecting some one whom he succerely hoped would not come, and then suddenty remembering that he had a previous engangement, he turned and embrased his companion in a long, loving and business like man ner-and then he kissed her. Somehow he seemed to feel that he had not made a complate success and he kissed her again. Then as it displeased with this style of work, he'repeated it in a sort of Emma Abbot way. This struck him as being quice the sort of thing, and the price ced it several times. After a while he stopped alssing the young lady and hugged her. And just here he displayed real genius. He was a master of the art. He showed a perfect familiarity with every possible style. He clasped her gently—then he equeezed her rapturously-then he grabbed her violectlythen he embraced her slowly and impressivelythen he bugged as if he had firmly resolved never to go into any other basiness as long as he lived, and then he heard samebody coming, and they walked off as if nothing in the world had happened. They turned into Broad street and having joined their friends, the shadows, near Wilson's coal yard, they repeated the Walton street performance, without any material change of programme. And then they stroiled teisurely into Lucky street, between Foreyth and Broad, and, in asswer to an encore, gave another performance of the same descriprior. After this they passed into Forsyth and when they neared the First Bamis' Church the idea occurred to the young man that he would give a farewell performance. They did so. Both seamed deeply aff cred, and the unseen au it noe was almost moved to tonis at the extremely touching sight. And then those happy necturnal el sor to my bisom comes moved si-cutly down Walton street, and the unseen andience of one slowly dispersed, strengthened in his conviction that there is nothing like the power of the press .- Atlanta Constitution.

CAT AND RATTLESNAKE -About three weeks beau iful supry weather we have had, which induced the trees to bud and bloom, I was walking in my garden one morning, thicking about preparing for an early start for spring vegetables, when I saw a large rattlescake sunning. My first impulse was to go to the house, get my ano, and kill it. But, looking around, I saw a Very large house out our lously creeping upon the reptile. Anticipating a fight, and equally desircus of geolog rid of the cat which killed chickens, I concluded to witness his attack upoo the scake. The cat crawled upon its stomach, pulling along on its feet, waisking its tail from side to side, and every now and then stretching its neck to view the scake. When about eight or ten feet off the spake suddenly coiled up, sprung its rattle, faced the cat and darted its forked toogue out rapidly. The cat commenced a rapid circle around the snake, so fast in fact that the eye could hardl, keep up with it. At last it got near enough and made a dart at its enemy, but through providential reasons went high above the snake, which also struck at the cat, thus breaking its coil. The cat went too far, and by the time it turned to face its foe, the reptile was again coiled and ready for the attack.

The same method was adopted and carried on for four or five times, occupying at least half so hour. The cat wished to catch the snake, but seemed aware that if it missed the neck is would be certain death. At the sixth assau & they met and instantly the snake was wrapped in several folds around the body of the cat, which used its sharp claws with deadly effect. The oat had been bitten on the head and neck several times, and both continued to fight, The soaks was torn nearly to shreds, but did not unloose its coil ar und its victim. The poison was swife and deadly; but before the cat died it caught the snake's head in its mouth and crushed it, and fighting they died, the soake enwrapping the cat in its coils. snake messured four feet eight inches, and had
